Rearring Monarch Butterflies Presentation Rated High By Attendees
The Friends of the Long Valley Public Library hosted a fascinating presentation titled “Rearring Monarch Butterflies” in the newly decorated Community Room in the old Laytonville high school. The guest speaker Chris Ineich, is a biology instructor at both Mendocino College and Sonoma State University. Professor Ineich describes himself as a Rose Ecologist because he studies the relationships between plants and their environment. He is particularly interested in and concerned about Monarch Butterflies, their role as pollinators, their habitat and the milkweed plants which support them. Assisting Professor Ineich in his well-organized presentation were his wife, Rachel, and his young daughter Annabel.

Chris Ineich is on a crusade to inform people about the possible loss of Monarch Butterflies and their habitat due to habitat and pollution. The Monarch story begins with milkweed because the Monarch Butterfly is unique in that it must eat milkweed to survive. The Monarch story begins with milkweed because the Monarch Butterfly is unique in that it must eat milkweed to survive. To the Editor:

I would just like to create an awareness that if people would keep their yard clean and pleasant. It would be a lot easier for the community to clean. Even if they are not directly connected to the type of mindless behavior never read this paper or the letters in this sort of thing?

Mail and saw that someone had dumped most of the bin for the Laytonville area.

Thank you for your continued support of the Laytonville Library people's "griping" and has unanimously (of course) appointed Chief Financial Officer Dan Hamburg's re-appointment of Third (not Fifth) to a position.

The proposed project area includes 35 northern and central California counties: Alpine; Amador; Butte; Calaveras; Colusa; Del Norte; Fresno; Glenn; Humboldt; Inyo; Jackson; Lassen; Modoc; Mono; Madera; Mariposa; Mendocino; Nevada; Olivehurst; Placer; Plumas; Sacramento; San Benito; San Luis Obispo; Siskiyou; Solano; Sonoma; Tehama; Trinity; Tulare; Tuolumne; Ventura; and Yuba. The BLM estimates that between 2,300 and 4,000 acres of state lands and State Net Record lands will be conveyed to the state of California to allow 16 state agencies to consolidate the state’s land acquisition into 35 distinct state conservation areas. The state will also acquire additional private lands to form a continuous corridor of 16,000 acres to expand the state’s conservation areas from 60 to 116,000 acres. The state will work through the BLM to assist in implementing the project.

Lawsuit Targets Ballot Measure to Split California Into Three States

In order to transform our Ukiah Valley into the nothingness of that say- ing, the barest semblance of a sentence, the barest semblance of a thought, the barest semblance of a conscious- ness. And blessings to Rainbow Ag Enterprises, the housing up by the golf course, and Oak Manor. Besides ignoring smart urban de- sign, the Lakeport landowners are running to end a failed Demo- cratic and Republican political party dynasty through which their corporations and their running are the result of the “Costa Hawkins” loopholes that allow for rent control. The California Department of Public Health (CDPH) this week released its second annual Life Option Act Report.

The report documents the number of individuals who died using aid-in-dying drugs in the state following enactment of the California Civil Code. The law, which allows terminally ill adults who meet eligibility requirements to self-administer aid-in-dying drugs, took effect January 1, 2016.

The number of deaths, which grew from 20 in 2016 to 77 in 2017, increased to 217 in 2018. Of those deaths, 134 individuals were insured and 83.4 percent were between 75 and 95 years of age, 95.2 percent were White, and 95.8 percent were female.

Among those who died using aid-in-dying drugs, 374 individuals received aid-in-dying drugs. Additionally, the report includes demographic information on those who died, including age and underlying illnesses.

For the most part, the findings are similar to those reported in the 2017 CDPH report.

The report found that the most common cause of death was cancer, followed by non-malignant conditions such as chronic heart disease, chronic respiratory disease, and liver disease.

The report also found that the majority of deaths occurred in the home, with 68 percent of deaths occurring in a private residence. The report also noted that the majority of deaths occurred in the home, with 68 percent of deaths occurring in a private residence.

The report also highlights the importance of education and outreach efforts to ensure that information about aid-in-dying options is available to those who need it.

The report also highlights the importance of education and outreach efforts to ensure that information about aid-in-dying options is available to those who need it.

The California Department of Public Health (CDPH) this week released its second annual Life Option Act Report. The report documents the number of individuals who died using aid-in-dying drugs in the state following enactment of the California Civil Code. The law, which allows terminally ill adults who meet eligibility requirements to self-administer aid-in-dying drugs, took effect January 1, 2016.

The number of deaths, which grew from 20 in 2016 to 77 in 2017, increased to 217 in 2018. Of those deaths, 134 individuals were insured and 83.4 percent were between 75 and 95 years of age, 95.2 percent were White, and 95.8 percent were female.

Among those who died using aid-in-dying drugs, 374 individuals received aid-in-dying drugs. Additionally, the report includes demographic information on those who died, including age and underlying illnesses.

For the most part, the findings are similar to those reported in the 2017 CDPH report.

The report found that the most common cause of death was cancer, followed by non-malignant conditions such as chronic heart disease, chronic respiratory disease, and liver disease.

The report also found that the majority of deaths occurred in the home, with 68 percent of deaths occurring in a private residence. The report also noted that the majority of deaths occurred in the home, with 68 percent of deaths occurring in a private residence.

The report also highlights the importance of education and outreach efforts to ensure that information about aid-in-dying options is available to those who need it.

Professor Ineich wants everyone to know they can help save Monarch Butterflies by planting milkweed. Visit the Book Room on Fridays, the Friends of the Long Valley Public Library have milkweed seeds and a few native plants to give you. Also check with nurseries and order seeds and plants online.

People who care about Monarchs often help them survive by picking the caterpillars off of the milkweed plants and taking them indoors to a suitable environment filled with milkweed to feed on. In 9 to 14 days a caterpillar will spin a chrysalis from which he or she will emerge as a full-grown butterfly ready to be freed to the outside world. Rearing Monarchs in your home is not only an interesting and fun activity but will help save butterflies from predators.

If you missed the above presentation, there will be other opportunities to attend the same informative talk by Chris Ineich. He will present “Rearing Monarch Butterflies” at the Ukiah Library on Fridays; the Friends of the Long Valley Public Library have milkweed seeds and a few native plants to give you. Also check with nurseries and order seeds and plants online.

The 2013-2015 drought has fostered non-native warm water species like green sunfish and bullfrogs. In 2018, the population of pikeminnow has shown that fish greater than 12-16” size indicates continuing high survival of the 2013-2015 broods. As spring flows. There were also tens of thousands of California reticulatus and juvenile pikeminnow less than 4-inch long that would have swelled the population number, if counted. The large 12-16” size indicates continuing high survival of the 2013-2015 broods. As spring flows.
